

Statement from Greenway Golf

Greenway Golf is pleased to announce the settlement of its dispute with the City of Alameda and the new path forward it provides.

The settlement includes new and important guardrails in the lease that ensure fair dealing, giving Greenway the protections needed to continue investing in the course over the next four decades and expanding its offerings for golfers and non-golfers across Alameda and the greater Bay Area.

After four challenging years, owners Avani and Umesh Patel, along with the entire Greenway team, look forward to moving beyond litigation and focusing the company's full attention on its core mission: delivering an exceptional public golf experience while expanding access to the space and the sport for the entire community.

Greenway looks forward to resetting its relationship with the City and building on progress achieved over the past five years, ensuring that Corica Park continues to make strides in serving as a welcoming, vibrant, and accessible public asset for generations to come.

Greenway Golf is deeply grateful and humbled by the unwavering support of golfers, parents, youth, coaches, teachers, nonprofit partners, small businesses, and residents who share the company's vision of transforming Corica Park into a sustainable open space for everyone.
